Abstract

Society of the 21st century is marked by a high-speed development of processes of change, innovation and globalization. From the beginning of this century, the process of globalization, which has shown the interconnection and integration between certain states, technologies, economic systems and cultures, continues to show its effectiveness in a wide way. These changes are not only affecting economic and political ties between countries, but also radically changing human demands for everyday life, behavior and knowledge. In the 21st century, globalization has deepened not only at the geographical, but also at the economic and cultural level. One of the main factors in this process is the development of Information Technology.

Introduction

The Internet, mobile communications and social networks – today have a huge impact on the structure of societies, the ways in which people connect with each other and their economic activities. In specialized industries, automation and digital technologies are widely spreading production to all sectors, which increases the efficiency and competitiveness of production. Another important change that has affected every person's daily life is the expansion of online sales and digital services. Sectors such as e-commerce, fintex and cryptocurrencies have not only become central parts of the global economy, but their rise to the middle as new forms of globalization is shaping the economic structure in society. Along with changes in technology and the economy, globalization in the 21st century also suggests changing social structures, connections between values and cultures. With the help of Global communication systems, cultural changes are developing rapidly.

Technologies are shaping global culture, and social networks are shaping the relationship between people to common socio-political issues. For example, global fashion among young people, spiritual movements in social networks and the same values are gaining popularity. At the same time, the characteristics of values, trust and social relations can be different for each nation, society. Despite this, globalization and Information development can also lead to the loss of cultural identities in some cases, causing new social problems to arise. In the 21st century, global challenges are emerging along with changes in society. The biggest of these problems are climate change, environmental crisis, economic unemployment, migration and terrorism. As a result of climate change, the concentration of harmful gases in the atmosphere increases, and the number of global warming, water shortages and natural disasters increases.

Also, the risk of inequalities, poverty and unemployment in the global economic system are contributing to the growth of social discrimination in some countries.

Migration and terrorism, along with several other global problems, threaten the security of societies. In the 21st century, the political side of globalization is also important. The globalization of world politics is increasing cooperation between countries, the influence of agreements and international institutions. Examples of this are the UN, YAPT, Eurosoyuz and other international organizations. Decisions on international organizations, responding to global economic, political and environmental challenges, encourage unity in the common interests of different nations.
