Introduction

The concept of gender equality that is widely used in our society is now the category of social and political issues. Achieving gender equality is a necessary event for the full human rights, encouragement of economic growth and building a sustainable society. However, gender inequality is widespread in many parts of the world, including developed countries. Social norms and stereotypes play an important role in preserving gender inequality.

That is why social solidarity and cooperation play an important role in providing gender equality. Social solidarity is seen in the combination of members of society to combine the common goal, they show mutual aid and solidarity. The concept of cooperation is manifested in various stakeholders together to achieve a general goal. In any society, people try to cooperate in the interests. Because in our minds, the relevant social significance will be resolved in honor of a broader issue. There are different forms of social solidarity and cooperation, including gender relations. For example, one of the main forms of social solidarities and cooperation is to establish community notification campaigns.

Main Part

In particular, public information campaigns on gender equality are particularly complex and consequences of gender inequality, gender stereotypes, and the rights of women's rights and gender equality. These campaigns are aimed at creating social norms that support gender equality, correct misconceptions and change behavior. It is no exaggeration to say that it will be positive solutions to promote gender relations between the population through the organization of campaigns.

The form of changing social norms in the formation of gender relations also plays a big role. It is important to change social norms in providing gender equality. It is possible to eliminate the harmful beliefs that support gender inequality through education, media, arts, religion, civil society, legislative and personal example and new values. Changing social norms can be resisted, but by communication, empathy, positive examples and supports can be combated. In providing gender equality, we can contribute to building social norms in a fair and inclusive society.

In addition, the implementation of inclusive policy has a special place in gender relations. Social solidarity helps to implement inclusive policy based on gender equality. The concept of inclusion policy is a policy aimed at ensuring full participation in society, regardless of their race, ethnic origin, ethnic, sexual orientation, social and economic status or other characteristics. In this politics, the rights and opportunities of life are treated, regardless of humanity, and applies equally.

The concept of reducing gender-based violence is also a major role in the topic we are learning. The concept of reducing violence is a set of complex measures aimed at eliminating all forms of violence, which is the consequence of gender inequality. When gender violence denies the violence caused by human sex. This type of violence is more common than women, but men can also be victims of violence in some sense.

The concept of gender equality we are studying is an important factor for economic growth, except for social justice. When women and men have equal rights, they can contribute to the economy fully, which will lead to an increase in production, the development of innovations and sustainable economic growth. By increasing the participation of women in the labor market, it is possible to fully use the labor resources. If women can work like men, the country's gross domestic product can increase significantly. Giving women education, health and equal opportunities in the work increase their labor productivity. This, in turn, increases the overall efficiency of companies and the economy. Women support business activities will create new jobs, contribute to the creation of new jobs, the development of innovations and economic growth. Women entrepreneurs often implement social and environmental projects that are useful for society. The increase in women's income has a positive effect on the well-being of the family, especially children's health and education. Healthy and scientific children will be a valuable resource for the economy in the future. Gender equality is an important factor in achieving sustainable development goals. Achieving gender equality will help reduce poverty, improve health, develop education, and environmental protection.

Results

Again, we can talk that gender equality is an integral part of sustainable development. Sustainable society is a society that does not endanger the ability to meet the needs of future generations, which is economic, social and environmentally stable, future generations. Gender equality contributes to the construction of a sustainable society in the following ways: the gender equality raises the participation of women in the labor market, which will attract more labor resources to the economy. Women's education and health increases their labor productivity, which increases the efficiency of the economy. Women entrepreneurs create new jobs, develop innovations and contribute to economic growth. Gender equality helps reduce poverty, as women will be able to feed their families and ensure their children's education. Gender equality helps to improve women's health, including providing reproductive health and reducing gender-based violence. Gender equality will help reduce crime, as people in equal societies are able to meet their needs and realize their potential. Gender equality increases respect and harmony between all members of the society, which strengthens the social solidarity.

Conclusion

In short, in providing gender equality, the concept of social solidarity and cooperation is incredibly important. This means that all members of the society should work together to support men and women, government agencies, non-business organizations, the public, and to combat gender equality and to combat gender inequality and build a fair, a fair society.

Social Solidarity helps to attract a wide public opinion on gender equality, to counter the experiences, and the implementation of policies and programs that support gender equality, and the implementation of gender equality. Cooperation, on the other hand, allows unification of various resources, experience and views, which helps to ensure the implementation of projects and programs aimed at ensuring gender equality.

To encourage social solidarity and cooperation, to support educational programs, the organization of educational programs, oppose the state of gender equality, and express gender equality in personal life.

In the field of gender equality, it is possible to build a culture of gender equality in society, build a promising and sustainable society, to encourage human rights, encourage economic growth, and to encourage economic growth and the opportunities for all members of the society. Therefore, each of us should strive to contribute to the way to this important goal.
